EXPLORING MAJORS & career paths

1. Make an appointment with Career Services
A career counselor will talk with you about the external and internal factors that get in the way of choosing a major/career path. Career Services will also help you prepare and look for part and full-time jobs and internships.

2. Take available assessments with Career Services
Most majors do not directly align with careers, so this process may identify a unique way to use your major. Assessments (free!) help you purposefully evaluate how your interests, skills, values and personality align with various career paths.

3. Research your major & typical (or not) career paths
Explore resources like the Occupational Outlook Handbook and What Can I do with a Major in...?

4. Meet with professionals & faculty in field(s) of interest
Talk with faculty in your discipline as they know how your major is often used in the world of work. Set-up informational interviews and job shadowing to see work in action with professionals.

5. Intern
You’ve researched it and talked to people about it. Now, try it out for yourself with an internship! Not only can this confirm a career of interest, but the experience makes you more competitive for jobs.

I am... in love with my major but don’t know what to do with it.

Make an appointment with Career Services
A career counselor will talk with you about the external and internal factors that get in the way of choosing a major/career path. Career Services will also help you prepare and look for part and full-time jobs and internships.

Take available assessments with Career Services
Most majors do not directly align with careers, so this process may identify a unique way to use your major. Assessments (free!) help you purposefully evaluate how your interests, skills, values and personality align with various career paths.

Research your major & typical (or not) career paths
Explore resources like the Occupational Outlook Handbook and What Can I do with a Major in...?

Meet with professionals & faculty in field(s) of interest
Talk with faculty in your discipline as they know how your major is often used in the world of work. Set-up informational interviews and job shadowing to see work in action with professionals.

Intern
You’ve researched it and talked to people about it. Now, try it out for yourself with an internship! Not only can this confirm a career of interest, but the experience makes you more competitive for jobs.